Session outlines

Inquiry questions

- How and why has primary education in New South Wales changed?
- What aspects of education in New South Wales have remained the same?

Recreated 1880s school lesson – 1877 schoolroom

The focus of this session is on recreating aspects of schooling in the 1880s. Before entering the schoolroom, lined up in single-gender lines, daily chores and travelling to school in the past will be highlighted. Palms of hands will be shown to the teacher as they were in the past. An oath to Queen and country will be recounted.

Inside the schoolroom, sitting on long-toms at original 1880s desks, the students will practise their times tables and read along using a copy of an 1880s reader. Students will write Copperplate using a slate and slate pencil as well as writing with pen and ink as examples of changing writing technologies. Examples of early school discipline strategies will be mentioned during the lesson with reference made to the cane and an early school punishment book.

During the session, primary sources will be shown and used, personal stories told and comparisons will be made to emphasise the changes and continuities in education and associated technologies since the 1880s.

1900s to 1970s school resources – 1910 rooms

The focus of this session is on examining and interacting with objects used at school in between the 1900s and 1970s. The session will start with Australia's former national anthem, God Save the King. Attention will be directed to features of the classroom, desks and displays. The students will be shown appropriate artefact handling techniques to protect old objects. They will be shown how sources are used to provide evidence and tell stories of the past.

The students will explore artefacts on display, examine objects closely and be encouraged to ask questions through a variety of activity stations. These include:

- Treasure hunt – observing and identifying objects and artefacts from education in the past

- Suitcase investigation – handling and examining original contents of 1960s to 1980s Globite suitcases to form an historical narrative on its past owner
- Jelly pad and pen and ink map – reproducing a map using a gelatine hectograph as a changing printing technology (1940s to 1970s); using pen and ink to label the states and territories as a changing writing technology (used to the late 1960s), and mapping as a continuous learning activity to represent geographical information.
- Twisted threads – making a twisted thread cord as girls did in prescribed needlework lessons up to the 1970s
- Woodwork – constructing timber toys using screwdrivers, screws, bolts and wing-nuts as boys did up to the 1970s and girls and boys did in the 1980s
- Weaving – contributing to a wool weaving using a cardboard loom, as students did in the 1960s to 1980s
- Postcards from the past – examining photographs of early school children to identify changes in education
- Tales and toasting* – toasting a piece of bread over the open fire whilst chatting about past technologies.

*Note - Tales and Toasting can only proceed if there are two adult helpers in attendance at the fire at all times, and if the weather is not too hot. The helpers cannot be the class teacher or teachers' aide.

1900s drill and maypole and 1960s lessons and games – 1960s room and asphalt areas outside

1900s wand drill exercises

Standing in evenly spaced rows, and instructed using drill commands, the students will be undertake some simple wand or dumb-bell exercises that were used in schools from the 1880s through the early 1900s. Drill was intended to build fitness and instil order and discipline. Students will also march in lines as they used to at school.

Maypole dancing

Displays of maypole dancing were included at special school events such as Empire Day, sports days and annual schools' displays at showgrounds undertaken from the 1870s to the 1970s. The students will hold a ribbon and skip around the maypole, accompanied by folk music, winding the colourful ribbons down the pole. Images and examples of children's clothing of the late 1800s/early 1900s will be shown at the start of the session. Girls will be invited to wear a lacy collar or pinafore and boys a sailor collar for the short maypole activity. Pinafores were worn by girls to protect their dress as clothing was scarce and difficult to wash.

1960s lessons – 1960s classroom

This activity enables students to view a recreated 1960s classroom so that they can make comparisons in education in the periods 1870s-1905, 1905-1970s, 1950s-1970s and the present.

Sitting at 1960s timber chairs and desks, the students will experience a mini 1960s Cuisenaire rods lesson where they construct a mat of 12 and use that to solve number sentences. Around the room are teaching resources and displays of students' craft work.

1960s playground games – grass outside 1960s classroom

The students will play some playground games such as skipping using a long rope, and if time, 'fly' using sticks, a game that demonstrates the use of found objects in student's play.

Note to teachers

Children's experiences of schooling in NSW in the past were diverse. What is represented in the NSW Schoolhouse Museum program is evidenced through primary sources but was not shared by all children in NSW.

Children's schooling experiences were impacted by the type of schools available due to remoteness, cultural heritage and abilities. For instance, Aboriginal students on Aboriginal reserves could only attend Aboriginal schools which followed a modified syllabus focusing on manual and domestic skills taught by untrained teachers, government policies allowed discrimination of Aboriginal students in public schools up to 1972 and children in isolated areas originally had access to only a basic education through half-time schools, house-to-house schools and travelling schools.

Refer to the NSW Department of Education's Glossary of school types and the links on the History of education page on our website for further information.
